Synopsis: In Bounce, Syed makes a strong and thought-provoking argument that purposeful practice and a growth mindset are the keys to developing expertise. Bounce builds on Malcolm Gladwell's 10,000-hour rule, an idea familiar to military leaders that expertise requires 10,000 hours of work and not just talent. Syed provides greater context surrounding expertise and how experts are created.

Book Review - Bounce: The Myth Of Talent And The Power Of Practice by Matthew Syed. I n Bounce, Matthew Syed debunks the myth of talent and gives hope, inspiration and encouragement to all who have dedicated themselves to the put in the hard work necessary for success in any field of endeavour. I do not know if I have an innate talent for writing. If I did, it stayed dormant for many years.

In Bounce (2011), Matthew Syed explores the origins of outstanding achievements in fields like sports, mathematics and music. He argues that it is intensive training, not natural ability that determines our success, and people who attribute great performances to natural gifts will probably miss their own chance to succeed due to lack of practice.
